

Jesus in India - Mind Over Matter (Telekinesis)

As he would visit those Holy places and those learned individuals, he would be on a religious pilgrimage (you might say). He was exposed to the philosophers, the astrologers, and the learned men of the times. The religion in India was the oldest in the world, stretching back in the understandings of thousands of years to Krishna itself, save for the Law of One. He studied, and became a warrior, like all who would take up the path of spiritual illumination, awareness, or to seek enlightenment.

He gathered information from several individuals, traveled extensively; not to the far reaches of the country, but to those major centres that are still in existence today; more to the west-central coast of the sub-continent. He learned from individuals, those mysteries, philosophies, and understandings, and the relationship between humans and the dimensions above. These were demonstrated to him. It was a mystical learning experience.

He enjoyed much in the way of the academic teachings and understandings of the scriptures and beliefs, for these ancestral truths are very similar between the religions; then, as now. From these simple truths and understandings, given from learned individuals, he grew strong. He had demonstrated his own spiritual abilities of the mystical Christ; he learned how to control his mind. He did a series of exercises that kept his body fit. It prepared him, as he grew stronger, how to deal with people and master the relationship he had with them, as he would become a world teacher.

We give but a brief snapshot of his life. It was ordinary, but extraordinary in the fact that he was exposed to many concepts of the deities, of the heavens above, and he became familiar with these religious, spiritual understandings from antiquity. He learned about the heavens and the dimensions above, and he met many interesting individuals who could demonstrate this mind-over-matter, or this ability to materialize items; the ability to make whole those things that would be in the cloudy, formative stage that other religions would call the manifestation stage. Later on, he was able to demonstrate the practical manipulation of the world: the multiplication of food, the quelling of storms, and the controlling of the wind.

These would be his formative stages, taught by individuals who had no difficulty in demonstrating and practicing their religious beliefs, in this way. It was a fascinating and exciting sojourn or trip for him. He was revered for his intelligence and his way of observing the teachings and tenets of this very complicated and most tolerant religion. He could see that this race of people, having many diverse beliefs or truths, had no trouble in comprehending that God was multidimensional and all-powerful. There was no conflict between his understandings, the teachings that he had received prior to that point, and now the exposure to some of the greatest Masters who walked the world at the time. He had many such conversations with those who were quite gifted, and he impressed them (and they impressed him). It was a “sharing;” a life that was somewhat filled with work, but there were occasional classes and teachings beyond his normal teaching, and practicing of different languages. But these were ordinary times with extraordinary teachers. He was waxing strong and gaining power and ability in the practical application of the mystical manipulation of matter by the spiritual influences. He practiced long times of meditation and different meditation techniques, and was given instruction in the telekinetic Law of Manifestation; that, that is held in the mind, can appear in the hand.
